DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The text of those sections of Title 35, U.S. Code not included in this action can be found in a prior Office action.

2. Claims 1-4, 10-12 and 14-17 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Reinprecht (USPN 5,09,620) and applicant's admission of the prior art as set forth in the previous Office action.

Regarding claims 1, 2, 4, 10-12 and 14-17, Figure 1 of Reinprecht shows a typical tennis training session with an instructor on one side of the net and the students on the other side. See column 2, lines 41 et seq. A typical training session often has the instructor sequentially project a plurality of game balls toward the student. See instant specification, paragraph [0001]. It is noted that Reinprecht teaches the concept of placing targets at specific locations on the tennis court at which the students aim; striking balls to such locations (i.e., the corners as shown in Figure 1 of Reinprecht), are those designed to be shots away or out of reach by an opponent. Also, Reinprecht specifically discusses that it is old and well-known in the tennis teaching art to create difficult patterned drills to mimic match scenarios, and develop playing strategies against mimicked match scenarios. See the bridging paragraph between columns 2-3. Moreover, it is old and well-known in the art for team coaches to place people on the court (tennis, basketball, football, etc.) to simulate how a particular point or play is supposed to develop. As Reinprecht introduces the concept of striking particular targets on the court to practice particular shots (down-the-line, crosscourt, etc.) in order to mimic certain or particular match scenarios, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to place a person at a location where a typical player/opponent might stand during that shot to better simulate actual game situations. The persons placed at these locations can be considered simulated opponents for practice purposes. Because tennis play is naturally dynamic, the simulated opponents would naturally and sequentially appear at different locations depending on (1) the direction of the particular ball projected by the instructor and (2) the particular strategy attempted to be employed or scenario attempted to be portrayed. Also, the presence of the Reinprecht targets is considered to naturally train the player to hit the ball away from an opponent, i.e., it is a much more common tennis strategy to hit the ball away from, rather than to, an opponent. The test for obviousness is not whether the features may be bodily incorporated into the structure of the primary reference; nor is it that the claimed invention must be expressly suggested in any one or all the references. Rather, the test is what the combined teaching of the references would have suggested to those of ordinary skill in the art.

With further regard to claims 2 and 14, it would have been naturally obvious for a coach, in placing people on the court, to illustrate a particular concept commensurate to the student's skill level.

Regarding claims 3 and 13, tennis ball machines are old and well-known in the art to sequentially project balls to players.

With further regard to claim 10, by having a coach place people on the court, it is submitted that such would naturally allow the tennis player to train placement and muscle memory.

With further regard to claims 15-17, it is also submitted that the people situated on the court by the coach would naturally correspond to the recited simulated opponents.

Allowable Subject Matter

3. Claims 18-20 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.
